Kids helping other kids

ARC Children’s Centre, a daycare facility for children with cancer and other life-threatening illnesses, has received a donation of $13,590 from the pre-schoolers of Kinderland.

Under the Kinderland group’s “Little Entrepreneurs” programme, its children aged five to six had marched off their paintings, sold home-made cookies and manned funfair stalls to raise the money.

Meals for the needy

THE staff and students of the Singapore Institute of Management joined forces with the Student Advisory Centre to pack and deliver food to 120 needy families in conjunction with the institute’s 50th anniversary celebrations.

Meanwhile, soup-kitchen operator Willing Hearts had three extra pairs of hands last Thursday – those of top chefs – to help their volunteers whip up close to 3,500 meals for the underprivileged here.

Celebrity chef Ian Curley of television’s Masterchef Australia fame spent the morning in the soup kitchen, helping Willing Hearts’ volunteers.

He was joined by Grand Hyatt Singapore’s executive chef Lionel Glaville and the head chef from premium Australian Steakhouse Prime Society, Dallas Cuddy. The trio are participants in this year’s 18th World Gourmet Summit in Singapore, which is on until April 5.

Void deck art for Gek Poh

Gek Poh, an area in Jurong West and one of Singapore’s oldest districts, got a fresh coat of paint last week, thanks to DBS volunteers. Together with 100 residents and students from neighbouring secondary schools, more than 300 DBS employees, including chief executive officer Piyush Gupta, rolled up their sleeves to paint a Singapore-inspired mural in the bare void decks there.

The cubist work, designed by social enterprise Social Creatives under its efforts to create what it calls “Void Deck Art Galleries”, marks Singapore’s 50th year of independence in 2015.

Taking Heart

KIDS helping other kids

ARC Children’s Centre, a daycare facility for children with cancer and other life-threatening illnesses, has received a donation of $13,590 from the pre-schoolers of Kinderland.

Under the Kinderland group’s “Little Entrepreneurs” programme, its children aged five to six had marched off their paintings, sold home-made cookies and manned funfair stalls to raise the money.

Meals for the needy

THE staff and students of the Singapore Institute of Management joined forces with the Student Advisory Centre to pack and deliver food to 120 needy families in conjunction with the institute’s 50th anniversary celebrations.

Meanwhile, soup-kitchen operator Willing Hearts had three extra pairs of hands last Thursday – those of top chefs – to help their volunteers whip up close to 3,500 meals for the underprivileged here.

Celebrity chef Ian Curley of television’s Masterchef Australia fame spent the morning in the soup kitchen, helping Willing Hearts’ volunteers.

He was joined by Grand Hyatt Singapore’s executive chef Lionel Glaville and the head chef from premium Australian Steakhouse Prime Society, Dallas Cuddy. The trio are participants in this year’s 18th World Gourmet Summit in Singapore, which is on until April 5.

Void deck art for Gek Poh

Gek Poh, an area in Jurong West and one of Singapore’s oldest districts, got a fresh coat of paint last week, thanks to DBS volunteers. Together with 100 residents and students from neighbouring secondary schools, more than 300 DBS employees, including chief executive officer Piyush Gupta, rolled up their sleeves to paint a Singapore-inspired mural in the bare void decks there.

The cubist work, designed by social enterprise Social Creatives under its efforts to create what it calls “Void Deck Art Galleries”, marks Singapore’s 50th year of independence in 2015.